1
2 THE COURT: I've made some preliminary notes
3 which I'll share, and I'll probably have to pause 4 and reflect a little bit. Petitioner is a former 5 mortgage broker in the state of Washington which 6 began business here in May of 1995, and in April,
7 May or June of 1997 DFI initiated an investigation
8 after receiving complaints. Apparently earlier 9 there had been five complaints successfully
10 resolved, but in April 1997 Salic filed a complaint 11 and in May 1997 Prater filed a complaint, and these 12 two complaints triggered a very thorough and 13 comprehensive investigation.

14 Then on May 13th, 1998 DFI issued a statement of 15 charges and signaled an intention to revoke the 16 petitioner's license, impose fines, make restitution 17 and so on. The petitioner then avers that they 18 voluntarily surrendered their license in May, 1998.
19 The appeal to this court was bifurcated and there 20 are two initial issues.

21 Petitioners argue that RCW 19.146.235 only allows 22 a compliance examination during the first two years 23 of operation and then only on a sampling basis with 24 no ability to examine all books and records, and 25 subsequent to that initial examination, which must

1 be commenced within the initial two years of 2 operation, can only make a subsequent investigation
3 in response to a specific complaint, the examination 4 of which must be limited to what is relevant to 5 investigate the specific complaint and not be any 6 broader or enter areas outside the specific 7 complaint.

8 The petitioners argue the legislature intended 9 only limited investigation of mortgage brokers,
10 unlike those regulated under the Consumer Loan Act, 11 RCW 31.04.145, which allows an investigation for 12 discovering violations at any time, similar to that 13 investigation allowed of escrow agents in RCW
14 18.44.420 or check cashers which may be investigated
15 at any time under RCW 31.45.100.

16 They argue that a state agency has only the power 17 it is granted by the legislature and has no inherent 18 powers, citing All Around Underground versus The 19 Washington State Patrol, 148 Wn.2d 145 (2002), and 20 that DFI had no power to order restitution to 120 21 customers who never complained and therefore that 22 order must be reversed.

23 Second, petitioners argue that acting director 24 Thomson was biased and thus should not have been 25 allowed to select the reviewing officer. In June

1 2002 Dellwo accepted a temporary appointment as the 2 review officer in this case. Petitioners, however,
3 argue that since Thomson, in their opinion, conceded 4 he was biased in his letter of April 2nd, 2002, that 5 when he confirmed the appointment of Dellwo, which 6 had been earlier made by Bley, the original
7 director, that it was biased. They argue that RCW 8 34.05.425(7) providing for a substitute when there's 9 been disqualification or bias should be construed to 10 require the replacement to be appointed by someone 11 themselves not subject to disqualification, even 12 though the statute requires such replacement must be 13 made by the appointing authority and that the 14 challenged person, including the appointed 15 replacement, makes the determination whether to step 16 down or not.

17 Petitioners argue that Jackstadt v. Washington,
18 96 Wn.App. 501 (1999), which they argue allowed a 19 police chief -- but I think it was the Washington 20 State Patrol -- to remove herself for bias to 21 appoint her successor, should be limited to its 22 unique facts. There the bias was in favor of the 23 one under investigation who did not want the chief 24 to disqualify herself.

25 Petitioners argue that the appearance of fairness

1 doctrine, like the appearance standard for Caesar's 2 wife, should override the specific statutory 3 direction and upon only a showing that bias might be 4 an influence, not that it actually was.

5 Finally, even if the admitted bias of Thomson
6 could appoint his own successor Dellwo, they argue 7 it was error not to allow the petitioners to 8 discover on what basis the appointment was made.
9 They argue that this refusal to allow discovery
10 amounts eventually to a denial of due process.

11 Now, the respondents point out that the 12 petitioners bear the burden of demonstrating DFI's 13 action was invalid under RCW 34.05.570(1) and that 14 they were also substantially prejudiced. DFI argues 15 that the act (Chapter 19.146 RCW) should be 16 construed broadly to promote honesty and fair 17 dealing with the citizenry. They argue that DFI may 18 visit the petitioners' office at any time to 19 investigate a complaint under RCW 19.146.235 and 20 that it is reasonable for DFI to have broad 21 authority to determine the scope of inquiry in this 22 regard. They argue this statute does not limit the 23 scope of inquiry, as argued by the petitioners, but 24 provides for a thorough, in-depth investigation of 25 any complaint.

1 In reviewing the legislative history, the last 2 paragraph of RCW 19.146.235, in part seized upon by 3 the petitioners here, was added in 1994, and the 4 final bill report instructs that its intent is to 5 allow an examination even without a complaint within 6 the first two years, but it is not a limit on the 7 scope of DFI's investigatory powers. If during a 8 thorough investigation of one complaint other 9 unlawful conduct is discovered or a pattern of 10 unlawful conduct is revealed, even if it's not 11 complained about, particularly because this is an 12 area which the average consumer may not have 13 expertise, that DFI has a duty to call for 14 compliance or sanction for non-compliance.

15 Insofar as the appointment of Dennis Dellwo, they 16 argue it was lawful and did not violate due process
17 rights or the appearance of fairness. They point 18 out that in our state the Office of Administrative 19 Hearings was created to be an independent hearing 20 agency under RCW 34.12.010, and when a hearing is 21 conducted by another agency, such as it is here, it 22 is with one of OAH's hearing officers. They then 23 say that an agency head may appoint a person to 24 review the initial order of the administrative law 25 judge and enter the final agency order. Here the

1 ALJ issued the initial order, but Thomson was acting 2 director.

3 Petitioners even call Thomson as a witness. The 4 previous director, John Bley, had appointed Dellwo 5 as review officer, and so DFI argues that when 6 Thomson became the acting director, he merely 7 reaffirmed the appointment. They argue the 8 Jackstadt case is on point here and that the court 9 based its opinion on the APA and particularly at 10 page 509 indicated the substitute must be appointed 11 by the appropriate appointing authority, which is a 12 reference to RCW 34.05.425(7).

13 DFI also argues that there isn't any evidence 14 that Dellwo is biased in any way. They say that 15 none of the factors in Ritter versus Board of 16 Commissioners, 96 Wn.2d 503 (1981) are present here, 17 such as (A) prejudice about the facts or parties, 18 (B) personal bias or (C) an interest where the 19 hearing officer can gain or lose something. Merely 20 speculating that Dellwo may be biased because 21 Thomson confirmed him as Bley's appointment is not 22 sufficient to even test the allegation of bias under 23 DFI's theory. There is a presumption, they point 24 out, that public officers will perform their duties 25 properly, citing State v. Post, 118 Wn.2d 596 (1992).

1 DFI argues that discovery was properly disallowed
2 under the principle of US v. Morgan, 313 US 409
3 (1941) disallowing an inquiry into the thought 4 processes of the quasi-judicial hearing officer.

5 The petitioners come back to reply that a specific 6 complaint cannot trigger an investigation of every 7 single file and record of the company. They again 8 point out that the investigatory statutes for 9 mortgage brokers are different than those for some 10 other consumer lenders or financial entities.

11 Petitioners argue that the legislature only intended 12 a company be subject to a broad review, and then by 13 sample only, during its first two years, and after 14 that period it is immune from any general regulatory 15 investigation and only specific complaints may then 16 be investigated, and then in the most limited 17 manner.

18 The petitioners submit that DFI's June 24th, 1997 19 demand -- I take that to mean at the location -- for 20 virtually all records on the day they are said to 21 begin the investigation, that while such demand 22 doesn't explain how this demand will be relevant to 23 any specific investigation, yet is a bold, general 24 compliance inquiry without regard to any specific 25 complaint. The follow-up letter to petitioners'

1 entire client base on January 16th, 1998, they say, 2 shows the breadth of the investigation before any 3 specific nexus was shown.

4 Finally, the petitioners again reply that Bley is 5 just as tainted as Thomson and that neither should 6 be able to appoint a hearing officer and for that 7 reason they were at least entitled to discovery on 8 the issue of bias for Dellwo.

9 That was my understanding of the case prior to 10 the oral arguments being made, and I had further 11 notes, but I don't think I can use my notes any 12 further at this point and have to discard what I was 13 prepared to say earlier.

14 First, on what I think is the least controversial 15 issue, though perhaps the most emotionally charged, 16 is the issue regarding whether Mr. Dellwo can be 17 appointed by Mr. Thomson or Mr. Bley, and I think 18 the petitioners carry a heavy burden here because of 19 the language in the APA that says quite clearly 20 under RCW 34.05.425(7), "If a substitute is required 21 for an individual who becomes unavailable as a 22 result of disqualification or any other reason, the 23 substitute must" -- and I'll emphasize the word 24 "must" -- "be appointed by the appropriate 25 appointing authority."

1 There is no provision to apply to the courts or 2 to the governor or someone else to make the 3 appointment. Although I didn't understand the 4 petitioners' written material to clearly ask the 5 court to require that part of the statute 6 unconstitutional, that would be the only way to 7 avoid the effect of that statute it seems to me. It 8 couldn't be more clear.

9 And there is a case which is directly on point, 10 though I agree with Mr. Roberts that it can be 11 distinguished on its facts, and that's the Jackstadt
12 case in which the chief of the State Patrol 13 disqualified herself because she previously 14 represented a trooper who was now going to be the 15 subject of a hearing, and even though the trooper
16 wanted her to stay on and be the hearing officer, 17 she stepped aside, but she also appointed the 18 replacement, and Mr. Roberts says that can be 19 distinguished from the case where the person for 20 whom the hearing is going to be under the scrutiny
21 of the fact-finder doesn't want the disqualified
22 person from making the appointment.

23 And I think that's a fair distinction, but I
24 don't think that it makes this statute inapplicable.
25 And I would point out that -- although I don't think

1 any of the counsel argued it, that in this area of 2 administrative law there are very many investigative 3 agencies who also hold the administrative hearings, 4 and during oral argument I asked Mr. Roberts, who 5 was quite candid, about the example of the sheriff 6 who when making an arrest seizes drugs or property, 7 such as cars and houses and real estate, and then 8 the hearing as to whether or not the person gets the 9 property back because it was wrongfully seized or 10 from some other defect of how the process was 11 carried out, gets a hearing in front of the sheriff, 12 the very person who seized the property and wants to 13 keep it. That's just kind of an extreme example.

14 But there are other examples. This court's had 15 cases where doctors whose licenses were revoked, 16 suspended or put under some encumbrance felt that 17 the hearing officer was biased because it was the 18 same officer who did the investigation when the 19 complaint was made by the patient. There is some 20 example of this in the Department of Revenue if the 21 taxpayer chooses to go to the Board of Tax Appeals, 22 but not necessarily if they bypass that and merely 23 make an appeal through the department because 24 there's two roads they can choose there.

25 And there is some avoidance of this, for instance

1 on an environmental decision where you can go to an 2 independent board like the Pollution Control
3 Hearings Board, but I think that the whole purpose 4 for the Office of Administrative Hearings was to 5 address the very danger that Mr. Roberts brings to 6 our attention here, and that is that when someone is 7 invested in making the investigation and has signed 8 their name on the results, there is a natural human 9 nature to stand by the results that you yourself 10 found or were part of finding.

11 So I think his case would be strong for Thomson, 12 but here he wants it extended further, and that is 13 can a person who perhaps admits they're biased be 14 permitted to appoint someone else, and if they do, 15 should the assumption be that that person too is 16 biased, which I don't think we can make that 17 assumption. If you're the person or entity under 18 investigation, you certainly can't feel very 19 comfortable if someone who's already publically come 20 out and said your actions "shocked the conscience"
21 then is the person who appoints the hearing examiner 22 who's going to review the fact-finder, and as 23 Mr. Roberts pointed out today, not only reviewed and 24 upheld the fact-finder, but extended the 25 fact-finder's findings and increased the amount of 1 fines and so on. But the issue is does it violate 2 the constitution or is it contrary to the 3 legislative intent?

4 Clearly it's exactly what the legislature
5 intended because the APA specifically says that when 6 someone is disqualified, the appointing authority
7 must make the replacement. So there's no doubt 8 about what the legislature intended. So the 9 question is did the legislature draft something 10 that's unconstitutional. And I think that's what 11 gets us back to the Morgan case.

12 Mr. Roberts' client is in a difficult position
13 because although I suppose they can do their own 14 investigation, they were denied any opportunity to 15 do discovery. I think Ms. Blado is right that 16 discovery can't be allowed or is not customarily 17 allowed into fact-finders' or judicials' thought 18 processes and so on. But does this amount to a 19 prima facie case of bias for the hearing itself when 20 the biased person isn't the one reviewing but has 21 simply made the appointment?

22 And that's where the Jackstadt case I think 23 answers that question for us, unless the Supreme 24 Court is going to distinguish it on the facts by 25 which it can be distinguished, and as argued by

1 Mr. Roberts, that when a person is disqualified, but 2 the person who's the subject of the hearing wants 3 that person to be the hearing officer, then the 4 statute applies, but if the person doesn't want that 5 person to be the hearing officer, then the statute's 6 unconstitutional, or is somehow not followed by 7 application maybe of a special writ to the Superior 8 Court or something of that nature.

9 I don't think that I can with integrity make that 10 finding, although the logic of Mr. Roberts' argument
11 it seems to me is unassailable, and at the same time 12 I can't say beyond a reasonable doubt that this 13 whole hearing should be thrown out because 14 Mr. Dellwo was appointed by Mr. Bley and confirmed 15 by Mr. Thomson. Even if I assume arguendo that both 16 Bley and Thomson themselves were prejudiced by their 17 involvement or supervision of the investigation into 18 the petitioners' business, there is no nexus like 19 that shown for Dellwo. The only taint he has is 20 that he accepted the appointment by people who 21 arguably were biased. So I would decline to reverse
22 the DFI on that issue.

23 This other issue regarding the scope of the 24 investigation is very troubling, and this is the 25 part of my notes that I had to discard. But during

1 the questioning of the oral argument, the colloquy
2 with all counsel, and because of what I'll call 3 boldness of the statements of Mr. Worthy when the 4 Court pressed him on it, it's made me rethink what 5 the legislature must have intended by RCW
6 19.146.235.

7 I don't know whether it's useful to say what I'm 8 going to say next or not, but after the written 9 material I was prepared to rule along the lines 10 Mr. Roberts has invited me because -- maybe because 11 I'm an old trial lawyer, I agreed with his line of 12 argument. And his oral argument was, until I 13 encountered Mr. Worthy's candidness, was with 14 integrity, he gave what he had to give, but he held 15 on to his point, and his thinking was exactly the 16 same as mine about -- or maybe mine was a little 17 broader than his, but until the oral argument today 18 it was my position that the first paragraph of 19 Section 235, to have any meaning at all, if it has 20 limitations, those limitations must have some 21 meaning, and we find that although the director or 22 his designee can look in every cupboard and under 23 every desk without exception, all books and records, 24 interview people under oath and so on, that it has 25 to be relevant to the inquiry that's being made, and

1 that the word "relevant" has to be given some 2 meaning is how it occurred to me, and that's what I 3 wrote.

4 So I was prepared to say that unless this 5 investigation began in April or May, which would be 6 within the two-year compliance time period and 7 thereby supporting a general investigation as is 8 allowed without any complaint being triggered during 9 the initial two-year period, that then any 10 subsequent investigation made pursuant to a specific 11 complaint might bring DFI into all of the books and 12 records, but that they would have to get there by 13 either seeing something in "plain view" while making 14 an investigation of a specific complaint, or by 15 learning things during the specific complaint, that 16 is inducting information that would logically 17 support later deductions for further extensions of 18 the complaint, and that by those two methods they 19 could follow the trail of an investigation no matter 20 where it took them, even if it took them to every 21 portion without exception of the company's business.

22 So I didn't see any problem with the scope that 23 way, but I guess to give myself away here, I 24 initially agreed with Mr. Roberts that there had to 25 be a trail. And here the department has conceded,

1 that is DFI has conceded that they didn't follow any 2 trail, that the all-encompassing notice was actually 3 sent and signed at least on June 23rd before they 4 learned some alarming facts, such as the books and 5 records were not being kept in Washington but were 6 all in California. That fact alone it seems to me 7 would have opened up a total investigation of the 8 entire business. But they concede that they didn't 9 know that at the time on June 23rd, that they issued 10 that order and demand for production and they didn't 11 learn that till the following day when they went out 12 to serve it and there was nothing there for them to 13 review.

14 So the facts couldn't be more clear and precise 15 that they were not following a trail, and Mr. Worthy 16 concedes that. His position, and representing his 17 client, is that if you look at what the legislature 18 intended, not necessarily by what they defined in 19 Section .010, but in the initial section, I think 20 it's .005, that they intended mortgage brokers to be 21 subject to broad regulatory authority for the 22 protection of the citizenry and that this section, 23 even with the 1994 amendment, was not intended to 24 offer them some sort of protection but that it was 25 always the legislature's intent that for good

1 cause -- and good cause in this case means if a
2 complaint's made that appears not to be frivolous.
3 And the word "frivolous" is my language, but if 4 there's a complaint made that they can from the 5 get-go, if the director deems it relevant, ask for 6 everything.

7 So it comes down to a very stark issue, and every 8 once in a while I guess I get in this awkward 9 position, but the way I see this now is conflicting 10 because I agree with the argument of Mr. Roberts, 11 but I believe the Supreme Court or the Court of 12 Appeals will agree with Mr. Worthy that the agency 13 has the right with mortgage brokers to -- if there's 14 a complaint that's triggered, to look under every 15 pebble and every nook and cranny of the business. I 16 think that's what's intended here, and I think I'd 17 be reversed if I ruled differently.

18 But I'll be interested to see how the Court of 19 Appeals or the Supreme Court -- that is I hope they 20 will address this -- how they handle this phrase
21 "deems relevant to the inquiry." Because if it 22 means the meaning I'm now giving it based on 23 Mr. Worthy's argument, that the director from the 24 get-go can request absolutely everything without the 25 showing of any relevance of it to the inquiry, why

1 is that language in there?

2 And so before coming out here I was prepared to 3 say they could follow the trail and get to every 4 place, but it has to start with some technique or 5 fact that's relevant to the inquiry. But after 6 re-reading, during the break, the first half of this 7 first paragraph, I'm now convinced that if there is 8 a complaint, then the mortgage brokers' doors are 9 open for as much investigation as the department 10 wants to undertake and that the director has 11 discretion to say I find everything relevant, which 12 in a sense means what does the word "relevant" mean 13 if everything can be relevant?

14 So it leaves me uncomfortable, but I think this 15 is the answer that's going to be upheld by the 16 higher court because of the overall purpose of this 17 statute, which is to protect the citizens and to 18 make sure that mortgage brokers' actions are clean 19 and transparent insofar as the people they're 20 dealing with, even though they might have a right to 21 keep business secrets from competitors, but that 22 they be regulated insofar as they deal with the 23 general citizenry in a way that makes them 24 vulnerable to this type of very intrusive and 25 all-encompassing investigation, if it's triggered by

1 a complaint.

2 I just cannot get it out of my mind that that is 3 what the legislature intended here, even though the 4 logic of Mr. Roberts' argument I think is very 5 persuasive. It's where I first went, but it's not 6 where I end up. So I'm sorry to make it confusing 7 by these remarks, but I guess I have to have the 8 integrity to say I think that's what the legislature 9 intended here, even though I don't know how they're 10 going to deal with Mr. Roberts' argument at the 11 higher court. I would not intentionally make a 12 wrong decision, and maybe I'll be reversed, but I do 13 think this is how this is going to end up. So 14 that's as far as I can go.

15 I'll sign an appropriate order if one's required 16 for this part of the case.
